Civil society consultation on access to justice is now online

The European Commission has decided to dedicate its 2023 annual Charter report to effective legal protection as a precondition for the application of fundamental rights. The report will cover the broader concept of access to justice through judicial and non-judicial remedies. It aims to provide a fundamental rights perspective on access to justice, defined as the ability of everyone to seek and obtain a just resolution of legal problems through a range of legal and justice services, in a manner that complies with fundamental rights.

Please take a moment to share about your organisation's work relating to judicial and non-judicial remedies. The consultation gathers the input of civil society organisations (CSOs) with regard to access to justice, paying specific attention to certain issues, such as removing barriers, positive and negative remedies, and facilitation. A Framework for Human Rights Cities

UPCOMING WEBINAR on Human Rights Cities on Tuesday, 19 September, 14:30-16:00 CET

FRA published a Framework for Human Rights Cities that offers practical guidance to mayors, city administrations and grassroots organisations in their quest to reinforce fundamental rights locally. Practice shows that being a human rights city helps develop a city's awareness of its role in promoting human rights, while also creating opportunities for increased cooperation with civil society and other local actors. This webinar will explore how civil society can use this framework and what experiences civil society organisations have in cooperating with existing or prospective human rights cities.
